

They

They were massive,
They were colossal,
They rose from under the monkey bar,
They crawled past the bikes and,
They flung over a large car.

They destroyed the football goal,
They pushed over a bird's nest,
They were like giant jaguars,
They didn't behave the best.

They tried to go on the swing,
They had a long and gruesome tongue,
They chased a cat down the path,
They liked the sound when a phone rung.

They snapped the fence in half,
They watched the children run,
They went into shelter since
They did not like the sun.

They went back to where they came,
They dug down a new pit,
They descended down the hole,
They vanished! That was it!

By Joel Featherstone

They

By Bella Warr

By Lily

They

They were humongous,
They were enormous,
They came rising from the sand,
They drifted down to the rickety swings,
They only had one hand!

They dived towards the water fountain,
They knocked down all the trees,
They looked like a pair of gruesome toads,
They gave me shaking knees.

They climbed the slide and slid back down,
They chased a little dog,
They had red eyes and pink fat lips,
They fell over a great big log.

They forced themselves through the fence,
They watched the scared kids run,
They clambered up the monkey bars,
They looked like they were having fun.

They shuffled back the way they came,
They hopped back into the pit,
They descended down beneath the ground,
They vanished. That was it!

