

Should We Brexit?

Since the reelection of David Cameron, there has been a debate on whether or not Britain should stay or leave the EU. David Cameron claimed, "If you vote for me, I'll allow you vote on if you want to stay or leave the EU. The EU has 28 countries and the countries in the EU can trade with each other easily and people don't have to have a passport to travel between the countries in the EU.

One of the main reasons to remain in the EU is because it is easier to trade with other European countries. Many businesses will find it difficult to order stock or send parcels out to people because it will be more complicated and expensive. Additionally, the EU's rules cost British businesses too much to run. On the other hand, people argue that we should Brexit because they think that it doesn't make that much difference to the way we send things to other countries as it's not all of our responsibility as citizens of the UK.

Another reason why we should Brexit is because people are afraid that Britain would lose its individuality about what makes us British because by the year 2025 the leaders of the EU plan to make all of the countries that are part of the EU one big country; one flag, one national anthem. Furthermore, the British government are having to pay millions of pounds to follow the EU laws where they are controlling Britain. Also, by leaving, we could avoid the situation with the Euro.

Many people however, think that we should remain in the EU because British families enjoy having low cost phone calls, lower credit charge and also lower flight costs which couldn't be achieved by Britain alone. As a result, if we did Brexit, then it would cost a lot more for the government to cover the extra costs, meaning normal citizens of Britain would have to pay extra to help towards this situation. In addition, if we leave then we could possibly lose our British companies and it is easier to argue with the rest of the EU when if we left, there's a chance we may find ourselves in trouble!

A lot of people believe we should Brexit because of the immigration problem. As a member of the EU, Britain needs to let a certain number of migrants into our country (decided by the EU) and we can't change that (Unless we Brexit). British citizens are worried that migrants may be unskilled and put a strain on British resources and that they also don't know the language and aren't British. On the other hand, some people think that allowing migrants into the country is a good thing because it makes more money for Britain than it costs. David Cameron made a deal that we could limit the migrants' welfare benefits so it can persuade people to stay in their own countries and not come to Britain.

In conclusion, after considering both sides of the argument, we have decided there are a lot of reasons to stay and a lot of reasons to Brexit. One of us thinks we stay and one of us thinks we should go, which shows us how difficult this argument is.

By Libby Harding and Lily-Mae Durrant.

